

Q: Is my Certificate of Completion for my Real Estate Principles Course still valid?

A: If you took an approved Real Estate Principles course from a private vocational school after 1986, your Certificate of Completion is still valid. If you took a full semester (or equivalent) Real Estate Principles Course in college at any time, your transcript or grade card will still be sufficient.

Q: What if I took the Real Estate Principles Course in a state other than California?

A: If you took a full semester (or its equivalent) Real Estate Principles Course at an accredited college or university, it will probably be sufficient. If you took the course at a private vocational school in another state, it may not be sufficient. In either case, the matter should be addressed to the California Department of Real Estate, as they are the only agency which can make the final determination.

Q: How long does it take to schedule the state exam in California?

A: While there are no guarantees, most people find that they take their test about 4 to 6 weeks after they send in their application for the exam. If this is inconvenient, the application allows the person to specify a date after which the person wants to take the test. Occasionally, requesting the test in another county could speed up the process if you are willing to travel to another destination (i.e. San Diego).

Q: When will I find out if I passed the California State test?

A: Within 2-5 Days of taking the test. When you take your test, the Department of Real Estate will give you a phone number that you can call to obtain your test results 48-72 hours after completing the test. You will then receive written notification of the results about a week after the exam.

Q: How often is the California test offered?

A: Ultimately, the test is offered as often as needed, depending upon demand. The salesperson's exam is offered in Fresno, San Francisco, Sacramento, Los Angeles and San Diego.

The salespersons exam is offered during the week, usually Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, occasionally on Wednesdays. There are morning and afternoon start times.

The admittance form the applicant receives which specifies the test date will also list the exact address of the test location.

Q: How long is the California license valid?

A: Once the conditional status has been satisfied, the salesperson's license is good for a four year term, and can be renewed for additional four year terms. There is a two-year grace period after the license expires during which the license can be renewed for an additional fee. After the grace period expires, the person will be required to retake the appropriate California state examination.
